Caloric intake of 36 chronic hemodialysis patients was measured daily to determine whether daily total caloric intake correlated with resting energy expenditure (REE). Patients were matched to controls, and body composition was measured on days 2 and 7. No correlation was found between daily total caloric intake and REE. Mean measured REE was 5.71 kcal.kg-1.24 d-1 in controls and 7.22 kcal.kg-1.24 d-1 in patients (P less than 0.01). The results suggest that the REE of normal controls is 2.3 times greater than the REE of patients, despite a 2.9-fold greater caloric intake of controls. This suggests that the hemodialysis patients are energy starved and that REE should be an important clinical variable in dialysis patients.orex> 1 48 25
