Widget Engine.Although the role of vitamin D in cellular differentiation and carcinogenesis has been known for decades, it is only within the past decade that the biologic effects of this vitamer, 1,25-Dihydroxyvitamin D3 (1,25(OH)2D3), on multiple tissues and cell types beyond the osteoblasts and chondrocytes have been described. Molecular and cellular studies during the past several years have led to an appreciation of the diverse intracellular mechanisms by which vitamin D controls the growth and differentiation of epithelial cells, mesenchymal cells, immunocytes, and neural cells. One of the major observations of this decade has been the molecular identification of the nuclear vitamin D receptor (VDR) and the discovery that this nuclear receptor functions as a hormone-dependent transcription factor that binds the vitamin D responsive element in promoter regions of target genes. These developments have led to the recognition of VDR as a potential point of therapeutic intervention in a wide range of conditions. The prototypical gene whose regulation by vitamin D is known is the intestine, where the receptor is expressed at high levels in the ileum and colon. Several non-hepatic cells that are vitamin D responsive include cells in the brain, the pancreas, the mammary gland, the prostate, and the female reproductive system. Some of the primary sites of action of vitamin D on these cells are the intestine, the brain, the immune system, and the reproductive system. In the intestine, the vitamin D receptor appears to play a role in cellular differentiation, the secretory pathway, calcium transport, modulation of T cell activation, and cell proliferation. In the

This tool is a low maintenance back-end solution, and to say that the EMC2 is not the end-all-be-all is an understatement. Is this right? Are they saying that a back-end solution does not work synergistically with a front-end solution? Do they mean synergy of the EMC2 with Java
