I am having an issue that I am getting User object from the django request object which is actually a Generic HTTP Adapter and not User. I am trying to get the user object so that I can add an email to the user and I am looking to setup this in a similar manner to the OAuth for Amazon app here So currently my request object gives me the token and the url to authenticate with. I need to get the user's account info based on the token and url. is there a way to get the user from the request object from the oauth package? For example: User = User.objects.get(username='user1') User.profile.email User.profile.username gets me what I want when I'm in a web browser. The basic question is how do I get the current user from the request object, not the User model? A: The problem is, that the request and the Authentication object aren't the same thing. They are two different objects that provides the same functionality. Hence, a User can be part of an Authentication object without beeing part of a request object. Normally, the OAuth for Amazon app would call this with: request.user = User.objects.get 09e8f5149f
