The Windows Installer XML (WiX) toolset is a collection of command line tools and add-ins for Visual Studio that enable you to create MSI packages. The utilities included in the toolset are:

- The Burn utility for creating MSI and IMG packages.
- The Dark utility for reverse engineering already packed applications.
- The Extended UI utility for creating MSI packages with Visual

Studio add-ins. • The Heat utility for creating MSI packages from scripts. • The Merge utility for merging MSI packages and patching files. • The Packager utility for creating MSI packages. • The Publish utility for publishing MSI packages for submission to Windows Update. • The WiX CDB Debugger, which can debug your MSI packages in the same way as the Windows Debugger does. This chapter shows how to create MSI packages using the WiX tools. Although you can use WiX to create simple packages, it is not suitable for complex packages. In the later chapters, we will use the Burn utility in more detail. Using the WiX Toolset from Command Line In order to use the WiX tools you must install the WiX SDK. The SDK includes the WiX Toolset, Burn, Dark and several other utilities. The SDK also contains the source code for the project templates, and the WiX Binaries. If you don't already have an MSI project template installed, you can download and use one from the WiX Binaries. If you don't have the WiX SDK already installed, you can download it from Figure 1.1 shows the location of the toolset after the installation. You need to install the toolset for every project that you create. Figure 1.1 WiX SDK location To create a WiX-based installer, you need to install the WiX Tools and the WiX SDK. If you use a Visual Studio solution that already contains a WiX project, you can open the project by selecting Open Project from the File menu. If you use a Visual Studio project that doesn't contain a WiX project, you can create one. To do so, create a new WiX project. After creating the project, right-click on the project and select Open Project from the File menu. You can also open the WiX-based project by creating a new project and right-clicking the project file. After the WiX project is
