Other links TRAIL RUNNERS SPEAK UP By John Garrett A second edition of Running Trails: Discover America's Greatest Outdoor Experiences, by John Garrett and Nick Butler, is on the way. The book, the result of a four-year project, was released Sept. 21 and provides detailed chapters on running trails and other outdoor experiences around the country. There are hundreds of examples in all 50 states, and there are separate chapters for each of the trail types, from national parks to local hiking areas. As a class officer in 1971, I helped to develop, and then promote, the first Running Trails guide. The first edition had 96 pages and was published in June 1972. The second edition is scheduled for release in October 2010. Because Running Trails was written for the backwoods footpath enthusiasts, most of the trail descriptions are based on the Appalachian Trail, the Pacific Crest Trail or the Continental Divide Trail. Despite the name, these descriptions include many miles of trails not on a high-elevation route. With the second edition, John Garrett and Nick Butler at Triple Creek Publishing added other major roads, parks and development. They also made it more complicated and more readable. The national parks, for example, are divided into nine sections based on themes. Runners who have been in the parks for a hike or a longer run can quickly find what they are looking for. The same is true for the chapters on the Appalachian Trail. The 22 sections are tagged with national park names and are grouped geographically. The book also expands on the first edition by linking more features together, such as how to find out about a long-distance race and why it is a good thing to participate. The book also includes many new resources such as maps, markers, trail glossaries and trip journal and reference work. The third edition, published in 2011, now has chapters on a dozen other trails, such as the Florida Trail and the Great Lakes Circle Trail. John Garrett Born in Pennsylvania, John Garrett is an Eagle Scout, a graduate of Ohio University, and a race director. In 1972 he was named Running Trails' class officer and promoted the first edition. He is the director of the Appalachian Trail Club.
