A: I don't speak for Decibel, but unless you have an expectation of 1:1 scale, then a pair of 8/4 wheel RC airplanes will be pretty suitable. Of course, you'd have to fly them at slower speeds, since the faster you fly, the more wind resistance your plane has, which affects the control forces. Q: JQuery -.toggle() method not adding new content dynamically I'm trying to apply this code: `$("#addNew").click(function () { $("#article_rightdiv").append(""); });` to the generated content dynamically: What happens is: The added content is a textbox and span tag with no name or id, but a checkbox. This checkbox isn't affected by .toggle(), which is necessary to turn a true/false value, into a check/uncheck mechanism. I've also tried this: `$("#addNew").click(function () { $("#article_rightdiv").append(""); }); $("#article_rightdiv").find("input[type='checkbox']").change(function () { var checkboxstatus = ($("#article_rightdiv").find("input[type='checkbox']:checked").length == 0); $("#article_rightdiv").find("span.show").toggle(checkboxstatus); });` but that's a part of an attempt to turn the checkbox into a toggle control, but it still doesn't work. Any suggestions? A: Since this is dynamically created, the input and span are not, the first thing is to add them. Use // Define a click listener on the anchor `$("#article_rightdiv a").on("click", function() { // get`
