The ability to successfully realize the goal of self-sufficiency in healthy nutrition will require an enhancement in access to a broad range of affordable and locally available nutritious foods. The overall objective of this proposal is to eliminate the barriers of distance and transportation, thereby increasing access to nutritious food. To accomplish this goal, we propose to continue and enhance our successful School Nutrition (SN) program by increasing and strengthening its implementation in rural settings. Our overall goal will be to enhance the value of SN to the community. By establishing SN and school gardens as a community asset, we will achieve our objectives by: 1) strengthening the connections between the SN program and local, and state agencies; 2) communicating the importance and benefits of successful SN programs to communities, parents, and school personnel; 3) creating partnerships with local, state, and federal agencies to make SN services readily available to schools and schools readily available to local communities; 4) creating innovative approaches to training local educators and students; 5) maximizing the benefit of USDA Farm to School funding at various levels; 6) creating policy and procedural changes that facilitate the connection between schools, the food systems, and the community; and 7) increasing local and state understanding and support for the value of SN nutrition programs. The first goal will be met by conducting two demonstrations and expanding capacity-building training to several local schools to provide on-site public health training in SN nutrition. The second, third, fourth, and fifth goals will be met by developing a formal process for USDA Farm to

School funding through the FITNESS (Feeding for Impact: Truly Innovative Nutrition Education) grant program. The sixth goal will be addressed through policy and procedural changes to increase SN participation in the Farm Bill, and the seventh goal will be met by utilizing SN grant funds to create and conduct a pilot study on public policy change. This proposal will be accomplished by conducting a test of the efficacy of this strategy using a randomized, controlled, intervention trial. The results of the proposed research will provide information on how to increase rural school participation in SN programs, how to establish school gardens as a community asset, and the efficacy of incorporating components of FITNESS (such as the local production of nutritious foods) in overall community efforts. through 09e8f5149f

Q: Where is a directory created to temporary downloaded assets in document directories of iOS applications? My app downloads images to document directory's caches directory by using in 'applicationDidFinishLaunchingWithOptions' and 'didReceiveMemoryWarning'. However, there is no images files and caches directory in document directory. I guess if there is such a directory, it must be created to temporary downloaded assets, right? Where does this directory gets created or where can I get this directory? (Maybe document directory is a bad place to check as I think the directory is not good for performance.)

A: The "caches" directory is a directory you get to decide to put your assets in. In production, iOS downloads your assets as needed to a files directory on the device. For testing, you can use the directory in NSBundle that will look for your build-specific files directory in your app bundle, usually named "Assets.car". However, you can change the location by setting NSBundle's "placesInDocumentsDirectory" property, so you could make your app look for your assets in the "Documents" directory. The caches directory is usually empty, but if there's a time when it's downloaded, you'll usually see it in the directory you name it. You can test if your files are getting downloaded by using the Instruments tool, available in Xcode to easily see your resource use. For images, the main problem that you'll see in Instruments is that iOS will resolve the URL used in the assets to the right image, and the build process will download each and every asset no matter what. As someone who is always looking at the sunshine and rainbows out there, it's easy to lose focus on the present. Focusing on the future is a great idea, especially as we head into the new year. So, what does the future hold? Well, a new project from One Earth Architecture + Design where they have created a future city in California which is a simulation of what Earth could be like in 10,000 years. Because of the release of the film "Period. End of Story" starring Emilia Clarke, the
